Each person of that constituency will vote for a maximum of n out of these x candidates, specifying the order of preference among the candidates voted for. Counting will be done as follows:

Make a table with x columns – corresponding to the number of candidates. Count the number of first preference votes received by each candidate and enter them in the first row.

$p = x$

$r = 1$

While ($p > n$)

{ (Let the m th candidate be the one who has received the least number of votes in row r)

Remove the m th candidate

$r = r + 1$

Count the next preferences of those who had voted for the m th candidate, add these votes in the remaining $(p-1)$ columns and enter the sum in the r th row.

The n candidates remaining at the end of the above process are the elected candidates. 1.4.1

In case of a secondary tie, i.e. if there are 3 or more seats for a given committee and after considering second preferences, there occurs a tie between two or more people, the third preferences of the candidate just ruled out is taken into consideration. In case of further ties, the consecutive (i.e. forth/fifth) preferences will be taken into consideration.
